H.192/S.94 would eliminate barriers youth and young adults face to accessing supportive services

Sponsored by Rep. Khan and Sen. Gomez

More than 3,300 youth across the country are under 18, unaccompanied, and experiencing homelessness. Young people may be experiencing homelessness alone for a number of reasons such as abuse or family conflict over sexual orientation and gender identity. There are existing services that could help, but current law prevents youth under age 18 from consenting to many services without a parent.

This bill would:

Allow unaccompanied minors who are between ages 15 and 18 and experiencing homelessness or in significant danger of becoming homeless to consent to supportive services without a parent or guardian

- Minors must be able to provide written consent disclosing their age, guardianship status, and living situation
- The services must be necessary to ensure the well-being of the unaccompanied minor
- Minors who are parents themselves can also consent for their children
